Last Week's Run

Text by Stumbling Dyke, pix from Snail Trail

Skid Mark was in charge of proceedings for today's outing in the Chiang Mai countryside. So you can immediately deduce from this opening sentence that it was a flat run. The A bucket being located near the Cocoon Farm in San Kampaeng.

About 25 of the faithful -with Leaky Faucet and Citrus Smeller making a return from a long leave of absence- turned out for what felt like the start of the hot season as the temperature had seemed to have increased considerably since my last run a few weeks ago.

As I was going through my pre run ritual, I heard a child's voice in the distance saying, "hello Teacher Mark". It turned out to be one of the students I teach at the school I work at. This posed somewhat of a dilemma for me because as a teacher I have to give the persona of absolute respectability and as we all know the general ethos of hashing, anywhere in the world, is the complete antithesis of respectability. But as I'm always on my best behavior it turned out alright.

The run took us through a variety of rice fields and the like with plenty of FRB loops allowing the back markers to trail blaze at the front of the pack from time to time – always good for the ego of those of us that prefer to adopt a more sedate pace.

Anyway a great run was had by all taking us about an hour, or so, to complete. Thanks very much Skiddy.
