Run # 1582 Saturday 12th March Hare Sheep Shagger

With the temperature hitting the high thirties and the hot season well and truly under way. What better way to spend a Saturday afternoon than clambering up some of the steepest terrain Chiangmai has to offer. Sheep Shagger was the hare for today's episode and had set the A bucket out on the Samoeng Road near the white temple. Around 25 intrepid soles turned out to see what he had concocted for us.

As we all gathered, there were one or two of the faithful expressing more than a little angst and concern as the usually reliable and ever punctual Beer Monster, Deep Throat, had yet to turn up. Obviously everyone's thoughts were on the plight of the alcoholic refreshments, entrusted to him, with little concern being actually shown towards Deep Throat himself. But with about 10 minutes before the start he, in his big orange truck, came thundering into sight putting everyone at their ease, with everything now back on an even keel all was once more well with the world.

Straight away the trail took us through some pretty intense shiggy encountering one of the prickliest prickly bushes I've come across for quite some time snagging most of us that came into close proximity of it. Once the shiggy had been negotiated we came the first circle check which created some confusion taking us a while to locate the trail. Eventually it was found, by Piggy I think, and off we went.

It's good to see Square Rooter back in the fold as it gives me personally some one to compete against, but when I enquired whether he would be taking the Rambo Trail he pointed to the mountain which was obviously where the trail was headed and said in that philosophical and sage like manner he has, "been there, done that" and merrily continued down the wimp trail. So I suppose by me taking the Rambo trail makes me the winner of this week's BRB competition again.

As I embarked on the precipitous Rambo trail I came across Obscene who was uncharacteristically dawdling at a very pedestrian pace. He made the reason for his sedentary pace very clear telling he had cycled about 30km in this heat to get to the A bucket and was absolutely knacker. He mentioned this on more than one occasion to me in case that I may forget. Anyway we eventually reached the apex of the trail and it descended as steeply as it had gone up. The Rambo trail was about 5.5km and gave us all a great workout. Thanks Sheepy a very well thought out run..

Today's run saw Always On Top attaining mug owning status with her 100th run, so congratulations to her for her dedication and support of the CSH3.
